

U6 TxA Summary

Introduction: This article mainly discusses the potential impact of Brexit, including (1) Economy, (2) Job Opportunities, (3) Trade.

Background: David Cameron's electoral triumph has brought the prospect of a British withdrawal from the EU one step closer.

Main Content:

The following is a general overview of each section:

(1) Economy:

The author stresses that the possible impact of Brexit on the British economy size from two different perspectives on the overall economy, and introduces the dual nature theory of the development trend of the British economy from the perspectives of army withdrawal and trade factors. The author listed statistical data from some organizations and individuals to enhance the argument of the article.

As Roger Bootle thinks, the EU is not worth staying in without fundamental reform. However, according to current UK policies, whether based on CEP or CER data, the decision to Brexit will have a significant impact on the UK economy. According to the length of the article, the opinions of social figures are still worse than better.

(2) Job Opportunities:

This part first reflects the impact of the UK as a member state on job opportunities and corporate cooperation. The article reflects the impact of Brexit's public opinion on businesses, with special mention of the automotive and financial services industries. Subsequently, it was mentioned that politicians and business people have different views on job opportunities.

Gerry Grimstone points "Leaving the EU would seriously damage economic growth and jobs in the UK. But the EU can and must be improved." This conclusion remind readers that "London is Europe's financial centre so there is a strong national interest in getting this right." But then Ryan Bourne remarks "There is little evidence to suggest that trade would substantially fall between British businesses and European consumers in the event the UK was outside the EU." The dynamic UK labor market maybe play an important role.

(3) Trade:

Consistent with the previous two parts, different industry insiders have different perspectives on the prospects of British trade. The author dialectically presents the views of people from different positions, and through his comments in the population, objectively introduces the potential impact of Brexit on British export trade to readers in the form of the article.

Mansfield concluded that taking the right measures, the UK can have confidence in the healthy long-term economic prospects outside the EU. As you can see, the author intends to emphasize to readers that the service industry is the leading industry in the UK. If we consider the UK's ability to negotiate favourable trade deals, we can easily realize that The CBI foresees tricky negotiations.

All in All:

Overall, the article involves analysis and perspectives on the potential impact of Brexit in multiple fields, showcasing the views and predictions of different individuals.

(感觉总体的写作框架像是在写：每一部分的作用，作者是怎样达成目标的，就偏向

U6 TxA Summary

Summary 3.0: 但是内容里, 又像是在尝试用 Summary 2.0 的样式来写, 我所理解的“Summary”应该是“言简”而“意赅”, 如果无法总结到位的话, 就像是重新又写了一篇文章一样, 有时候把握不好这个“该不该加描述”的度)

由于有很多专业性的词语, 一部分短语和单词用到了翻译器, 写的可能不是特别好, 感觉逻辑连贯性还有待提升, 很希望老师能给一点建议!

张梓卫 10235102516
10235101526@stu.ecnu.edu.cn